too many El Coyote margaritas; attended a Charles Phoenix retro slideshow; had a martini at Musso & Franks; know that a yellow light is equivalent to a green left arrow; experienced sunset from the Getty Center; agree that valet or any paid parking is always the last resort; visited Marilyn at the Pierce Brothers Westwood Memorial; woken up still tasting your Versailles half roast chicken dinner; vow to go to the Hollywood Bowl at least once each summer; went through a Marty and Elaine phase; are a master of surface street shortcuts; consider yourself a Farmer's Market aficionado

ABOUT ME

LAUREN GILCH

I love Los Angeles and all the city has to offer. I bristle when people say LA has no culture. There is a plethora of art, music and theater available 24/7 all over this town. However I do admit that it takes some effort to find and keep track of what's going on – especially the kind of activities that won't render you penniless. LAintheKnow launched in August 2009 with the mission to provide a simple, one-stop, arts-centric, curated, monthly events calendar for budget-minded Angelenos that like to go out a lot. I don't list everything happening in town only what I deem notable and affordable - free to $25. That being the case you might wonder if we share the same interests, tastes or idiosyncrasies to make this blog a must-read. Check-out the "You're not an Angeleno in the Know unless" section. If my call-outs don't resonate with you, best to look elsewhere for ideas on what to do in LA. If you're always on the lookout for the latest freebie or cost savings – and who isn't? - check-out "The Find" section for everyday or ongoing happening deals.
